A Mr. Lawrence proceeded to the house of Jacob J. Deitz on Tuesday last for the purpose of serving a sum-mons. He found Mr. D. near his house, and handed him the papers. D. took them and read them, when he threw them on the ground seized Lawrence by the throat, calling him a damned scroundrel for coming to serve papers on him. He then called to his family to blow a horn, when a man named Hollenback, who was at work for Deitz, as a mason, interceded for Lawrence, who managed to get away, and started off on a run. Deitz followed in pursuit, knocked Lawrence down, and held him until four men in disguise made their appearance they then tied his hands behind him and took him to a small piece of brush near by, then tore off his coat, vest and cravat, and with a jackknife cut off his hair, occasionally cutting the scalp, and, remarking that they had a plaster that would heal it up, they tarred his head and body, and poured tar into his boots. After exhausting all their ingenuity this way, each cut a stick and whipped him until they got tired. They then tied his hands before him and started him for the house, each of them kicking him at every step. They made him take the papers back, but took them away again, when, after knocking him down again, they left him, and he succeeded in reaching the residence of George Becker last evening. The Gardner Trial. CLOSE OF THE SUMMING UP-THE CASE SUBMITTED

TO THE JURY.

WASHINGTON, May 20, 1853.

In the Gardner trial, this morning, the District Attorney, in continuation, called attention to discrepancies be tween the evidence before the Board of Commissioners and tween the evidence before the Board of Commissioners and the testimeny of Abbot and Slocum. The latter saw none of the timbers or remains of the extensive buildings and mining machinery described in the deposition before the former. The mines they visited could not have been those for which the claim was allowed. There was not a particle of evidence that those mines were Gardner's mines succept the statement of defendant himself. Abbot and Slocum undoubtedly saw the mines they described; but those were the mines of Talpan. In the State of Queretar, visited by Captain Barry and others. He further animadverted upon the conduct of accused, which he thought wholly inconsistent with that of an innocent man; and, in conclusion, thanked the jury for their inclusience to the extended remarks he had felt it his unity to make. He had never before been engaged in a case of such responsibility. There never had been a case in this country, perhaps not in any country, which devolved so high a responsibility upon all concerned. The character and perpetuity of our political institutions was involved in it. The question whether virtue, which was the foundation of republican institutions, could be maintained was at issue. It was more difficult to bring offenders to justice in this country than in the monarchies of Europe; and the eyes of this great nation, and/of the world, were upon the jury, looking with anxieus solicitude at the result. He submitted the case to the jury, confident that they would decide, not from motives of sympathy with the accused, but out of strict regard to the eads of public justice, acquitting him if a reasonable doubt existed in their mads, and convicting if otherwise.

At the conclusion of the District Attorney's remarks, Mr. Bradley visibed it understood that they now submitted the case to the jury without argument.

Mr. May inquired whether the counsel for defence decidence to the court.

Mr. Bradley called the attention of the Court of the Court.

The police officers, believing it to be useless to make any attempt to go on board, after the refusal, returned to the magistrate, and reported the fact.

About noon yesteday the Sardinian Consul called on the Mayor and Chief of Fulice, respecting the demand made by the two police officers, to board the frigate, on the afternoon previous. The Consul wished to be understeed that the Captain of the frigate did notwerstand the nature of the visit.
